

As the number of residents buying and selling goods online continues to increase, the potential for risks associated with these transactions does as well. Many police departments allow residents to carry-out internet sales transactions on police property. The purpose of these designated zones is to provide consumers a level of comfort knowing they can make their transactions in a public place. Below is a list of transaction zone locations in Massachusetts.

If your town is not listed, that does not necessarily mean exchanges on police property are prohibited. Call your local police department and inquire.
